Keymacro records keyboard presses as macros (strings) and performs their actions using keymapping software. To work, this program requires at least one keyboard, a mouse, and a visual interface to run, and it must be activated at least once. Keymacro works in a similar way to AutoHotkey and AutoHotkey, but it works on different input devices. For example, to use it to change the Shift key to Caps Lock, you need to log in to a computer using the Windows keyboard. You can then save a macro that, when run, turns Caps

Lock into Shift. You can then use the Shift key to simulate Caps Lock to type upper case characters. Keymacro does not require a specific input device; instead, it will work with any device that can be connected to the PC. Keymacro can be used to automate any function. It can be used to write a macro to automatically turn Caps Lock on and off or to open any program. Keymacro will not work without a mouse or a keyboard. Some of the mouse functions may work with the mouse but not with the keyboard. There may be some features that are not entirely compatible with a keyboard. Some Windows features, such as NumLock or Ctrl-Alt-Del, are not supported. DisconnectPC 2.0
