I usually write things like: First place I visited was Las Vegas But, on the internet I see things like: First place I visited in Las Vegas was.... What is the difference between the two? What I'm trying to say is that the first sentence is used to mean "I visited the place and I will visit the place again" while the second sentence is used to mean "I visited a place and I will visit the place again". A: In the first sentence, "was" is used for the simple past, while in the second sentence, "was" is used for the perfect continuous tense. Sometimes the two tenses in English resemble each other, especially for lists and similar structures. For example, when I want to list all the cities where I lived, I say: "New York, San Francisco, Boston," or "I lived in New York, San Francisco, and Boston." The choice of whether to use the simple past (say "New York") or the perfect continuous tense (say "I lived in New York") depends on the focus of the sentence. In the example above, I'm speaking about a single place, but in some cases I may be talking about more than one place.
