For a comprehensive, in-depth coverage of Photoshop, check out Adobe Photoshop CS7 For Dummies, by John R. Brown and David L. Dunmire (published by Wiley). This book includes detailed tutorials on using everything from features to Photoshop's Layers panel. Graphics Design for Today's Web and Computer Today, graphic designers create everything from logos and websites to advertising and brochures and advertisements to t-shirts, packaging, print ads, and anything else in between. If you've ever made a logo or logo for a brochure or website, you've seen the process. Many designers understand that we're in the midst of a shift from printed materials to online. Therefore, they've created brochure design programs and specific software programs for making logos. It's part of their design process that they use a design package or programs for design. These programs are very useful for creating brochures and websites. They enable you to customize your brochure and website by using themes, shapes, and fonts. They can help you create flash animations (video) or even games. One of the best programs for designing brochures is Adobe InDesign (`www.adobe.com`). Some have created their own InDesign tutorials to teach you how to create your own brochures or even for professionals to sell. (I'm going to show you a quick way to get started with InDesign.) Websites are the new brochure. They're getting more and more interesting and engaging. Using Photoshop, the program covered in this book, is one of the programs that most web designers use for creating websites. Another popular program that web designers use is Adobe Dreamweaver (`www.adobe.com`), which enables you to make a website, add a blog, and even include YouTube videos. It's a great program that allows you to create something fast without any HTML coding (which is covered in Chapter 14). The other obvious reason graphic designers use Photoshop is that Photoshop enables them to do almost any kind of graphic editing that they want. Even if you're thinking that web design is just a whole bunch of text, the fact is that you can add a doodle and some text to your site and — violà! — you have a website. So, when you create a brochure, website, advertisement, or any other printed material — there really aren't many limits to what you can do. Graphic designers have taken advantage of this flexibility to get creative

The present invention relates to surgical gloves, and, more particularly, to surgical gloves used by surgical personnel in operating rooms and the like. The prime function of surgical gloves is to protect the wearer from the hazards of the surgical field, including blood, body fluids and other fluids, and foreign objects. Because of this, surgeons must carefully match the properties of gloves to the character of the exposure they will encounter. For example, surgical gloves used in a blood-filled field must be able to withstand a significant exposure to blood and bloodborne pathogens without breaking down, and must permit the gloved surgeon to apply force to a surgical instrument while it is performing a surgical procedure or where the glove is otherwise in contact with the surgical instrument. In addition, surgical gloves should permit the surgeon to move freely while wearing the gloves, and should fit comfortably when they are worn. In an article by A. I. Nijenhuis et al., titled "An Evaluation of Three Elastomeric Surgical Gloves" (Journal of Aeromedical Research, 1989, Vol. 8, No. 3, pp. 173-183), the authors conducted a study of the properties of various surgical gloves including latex, nitrile, and polyurethane. They found that latex gloves were strong, but they described their latex gloves as being slippery, which made them unsuitable for use in some surgical procedures. The nitrile gloves exhibited good grip and were suitable for use in surgery where movement is required, but they do not bond to the skin and may tear during use. Polyurethane gloves were less slippery than nitrile gloves, but were not satisfactory in that they tended to break down quickly. In recent years, latex surgical gloves have been replaced in many surgical procedures by polyurethane surgical gloves. In "Serum Latex and Polyurethane Blood Contamination of Polyurethane Gloves" (Journal of Hospital Infection, 1990, Vol. 20, pp. 587-590), the authors note that, although latex gloves are often preferred by surgical personnel, the use of latex surgical gloves has been associated with a number of disadvantages, including the presence of an elastomeric coating that allows latex to spread through the glove and ultimately into the surgical wound. In the article, the authors describe how, over time, the use of latex surgical gloves results in the release of the entire coating into the surgical wound. It has been reported by P. L. Hahn et al., in a paper

The crash was reported at 4:41 a.m. at the crossroads of Farmington and Riverside roads, according to the Davis County Sheriff's Office. The victim was a 33-year-old Davis County woman. Her identity was not released. The Davis County Coroner's Office later identified her as Wendy B. Smith of Boulder City. According to the news release from the coroner's office, Smith was fatally injured in the crash and died at the scene. Two people were transported to the hospital for treatment of injuries that are not life-threatening. Deputies said the crash occurred when an SUV driven by Donaldson, of Louisville, veered off the roadway and struck a light pole, causing it to fall onto the roadway and crash into the SUV. Dale Potter, of Louisville, was driving the SUV that had been initially hit by the other vehicle. He stopped and was not injured, the news release states. The self-proclaimed leader of a radical North County mosque sued three police officers on Wednesday for excessive use of force when they handcuffed him and took him to the hospital for a mental health evaluation. Mohammad Schafer, the imam at a mosque in the 200 block of San Diego Street near Carmel Valley, initially complained of chest pains last month while riding the bus back to his new home. He told officers that he had previously been admitted to psychiatric hospitals. He was searched by officers and found with a binder filled with radical Islamic literature, according to the lawsuit. "Schafer had the binder open to a page that contained names of many San Diego residents of interest to the FBI," the suit states. "According to Schafer, some of the people on the page were high-ranking FBI officials." He was handcuffed and taken to the hospital where he was evaluated by a psychiatrist, the suit states. Although officers told Schafer's sister that he was under psychiatric
