process of asking and answering questions: Ask a Question Answering questions Should a question be deleted? How do I write a good answer? The timeline of the question and answer is a long story.
That timeline is listed on the question page and "timeline" on the question's page. Without going into detail, here's a short timeline: User1 asks question2, which is answered by user3. User4 upvotes user3's answer. User3 gets some reputation from a vote reversal. User3 edits the question to say something that turns off users who read question2. User4 upvotes User3's edit, thinking that question2 was edited. User3 sends an email asking if the edit is okay. Someone edits the question to say something that turns off users who read question2. Someone else edits the question to say something that turns off users who read question2. User3 sends an email saying he doesn't understand why the question is closed. Someone reads the comment that shuts down the discussion and closes the question. User3 sends an email saying that he still wants the question to be reopened. Someone sends the reopen notice email to SE's staff. The reopen notice appears in the FAQ. Someone sends a comment to the comment author, saying that he is going to delete the comment. A staff member deletes the comment author's comment. SE tells user3 that the question is reopened. User3 confirms the change in the timeline. Posting a valid answer is one of the ways to earn reputation. The goal of a Q&A site is to give answers, not get reputation.
