Continua .A new wrinkle in the Apple-FBI debate is emerging over whether the company ever gave the FBI a "backdoor" into the phone used by one of the San Bernardino shooters. That raises questions about Apple's privacy stance at a time when encryption plays a central role in cybersecurity policy and the FBI uses the device as a major investigative tool. "Apple's admission regarding the backdoor feature is a promising development," said Joe Hall, a senior security strategist at Carbon Black, a cybersecurity software firm. "It's a bit of a 'Yosemite effect' for the FBI. It's not going to help their case that an alleged terrorist was possibly given access to such a critical feature." Apple's chief executive, Tim Cook, said in an interview with the BBC that while the iPhone was "fully encrypted," Apple had given the FBI a way to bypass the encryption for investigative purposes. The company did not say whether this was for the San Bernardino case or other investigations. "They are saying they gave the FBI a part of the system that can be used if they have a court order to unlock it," said Jason House, a senior director at security firm Nu-Tech Security and former federal prosecutor. "The FBI is saying they have never asked." The FBI has used encryption as a basis for asking several tech companies to break into devices, but this case involves a method to bypass the encryption once it is in place. The phone involved in the San Bernardino case is an iPhone 5C, which Apple said is not a "significantly upgraded" version of the iPhone 5S, so not protected by the new encryption. The technique of using a backdoor to bypass encryption, even though once installed there is no way to remove it, has been used as a legal episode 1. Tunisien : Le président de la République a indiqué lundi qu'il se prononcera contre la torture dans la foulée de la fusillade qui a fait plusieurs morts dans une salle de prière à Sousse. « Je suis pour la fin de la torture et je suis pour la fin de la violence », a souligné le chef de l'Etat, qui s'est ajouté qu'il était « extraordinairement ému par ce qui s'est passé ce week-end à Sousse ». Le président a également déclaré que le cas de la police qui avait fusillé des manifestants dimanche à Sousse constitue le « dernier exemple » d'un procès ouvert par une voix ». « Il est nécessaire de regarder les réalités de la vie quotidienne dans un pays où les valeurs communes de tous nous concernent tous », a-t-il ajouté. Alors qu'une vingtaine de personnes sont toujours recherchées dans le cadre de l'attaque survenue mercredi, le président de la République s'est aussi exprimé contre les attaques se produisant sur des personnes seules ou en famille dans le cadre de « crimes qui font malheureusement l'objet de la terreur. » Vendredi, Mehdi Belhassan, un salafiste de 21 ans, a été interpellé à la mi-journée dans la ville du Sud du pays par une unité de gendarmerie. Il est accusé d'avoir préparé un attentat.
