Heart failure (HF) with a reduced ejection fraction (RHF/RHF) and HF with a preserved ejection fraction (PHF/PHF) are the most common types of HF in clinical practice. Both show poor prognosis, but the prognosis of RHF/RHF is worse than that of PHF/PHF. Brain natriuretic peptide (BNP) may be useful to predict the outcome of HF patients, but data are limited to this condition. We examined the prognostic value of BNP in RHF/RHF and PHF/PHF. We collected patient data from two hospital-based databases. 753 HF patients were enrolled (RHF/RHF n = 521, PHF/PHF n = 332). We identified each patient's outcome by tracing each patient's hospital discharge code. All-cause mortality was significantly higher in RHF/RHF than PHF/PHF (51.7% vs. 34.4%, P Q: Highchart legend color issue Here is the code var chart
